The Office-Holders' Power. The New York mammoth papers are all against Conkline. The Times, the Republican organ, has waged a spirited war upon him; and the Herald bas, like another ME-PHISTOPHELES, been coquetting with him. The Tribune is sharp and pungent upon himthinks him "in articulo mortis." With these we may count the Evening Post and Harper's Weekly. The World, the so-called Democratic organ, of course well performs its simple office of annoying the adversary as much as possible. The Tribune, Times, and Herald seem to concur in the expectation Cincinnati Convention, but "fiz" out at the opening.

Nevertheless, the pro-consul will have to think that this is now a nation. force which any of his competitors would gladly count upon. He has the favor of General Assembly of Virginia. GRANT and the power of the officeholders to back him. This advantage is understood in party politics now-a days. The Times, commenting upon the Conkling maleuvre to dragoon the Republican party into his nomination, makes the following remarks on this We cannot forget that the main motive for seeking control of party machinery in these days is something lower than legitimate ambition-something more sordid than partisanship. It is the hunger for the fruits, direct and indirect, of patrorage. The chief of a faction, as in the case of the senior senator from New York, may be above any desire of pecuniary gain, while he may be, by the exigencles of the situation, compelled to use the greed of others; and if he stoops to that, be finds a large array of office-holders and office seekers ready at his hand. If one chief does not use them, another will. They are there, active, eager, and possessed of enormous power. They sre sure-to some extent they are compelled-to use that power with an eye single to the chances of retaining or gaining office. They knew that their fortunes are at the mercy of the appointing power, and an impulse, stronger in the long run than disinterested party zeal or unselfish patriotism, tends to sway them as the appointing power directs. The worst mischief, therefore, arises, not from the nature of our party machinery, but from the enormous influence constantly at work to pervert it. We adopt modes of party action which open great opportunities for abuse, and then we set up the millions expended in the civil service as bribes to induce politicians to seize these opportunities. This is the gist of the whole matter. It is to this that those Republicans must direct their aitention who desire a radical and lasting improvement. The election of the best of men to the presidency and to Congress will be only a palliative. We may, by great effort, at peculiar junctures, overcome the baleful power of patronage, but we cannot prevent it from rising and assuming control again until we change the system of minor appointments in the civil service. When we give the sixty thousand subordiate office-holders tenure for good behavior, and render the million or so of office-seekers incapable of procuring any reward from the public Treasury for mere political service, they will let the party machinery alone.

Exsetly. "When we give," &c., and pray when will that be? Never under our present form of government. The "outs' will never give the "ins" the "life-tenure," and as there can never be a time when there will be no "outs" to oppose this tenure, there never will be such a change made. But there is this to be said about it: that the outs, since the patronage of the Government is against them, must get what advantage they can from the public scandal of the abuses and corruptions of the incumbents in fighting to displace them. In the present presidential campaign we have the example of a pro-consular candidate with the whole patronage of the Government to back him. Thus the patronage of Government is to become a torpedo in the ranks of the party that wields it, and may belp to blow up the party itself. Blaine and those leaders and people who are arrayed against this patronage will find it possibly more powerful than even they have supposed.

The Currency-Coming to Reason. The letter-writers from Washington have been throwing out rumors and suggesting probabilities for some time that have tended to inculcate the impression that the ultras on the money question were coming to some sort of compromise on the subject of the currency. The Tribune of Friday speaks of a compromise as probable, and states that it understands that a feature of it is that holders of fifty dollars and upwards of United States notes shall have the privilege of funding them in Government bonds, and demurs at the further intelligence it has received that another feature of the compromise is to be the repeal of the resumption-act. That, At thinks, would do "immeasurable damage." The fact is that the act is now doing 46 Immeasurable damage," and nothing but the absolute necessity of its repeal is causing the gravitation towards a " compromise."

This compromise is not a compromise between the differing wings of the Democratic party, but between the reasonable and practical members of both the Republican and Democratic parties. It is found impossible for a triumph of reason over folly, of honesty over the rascality of the money dealers, of the people over their oppressors, as long as the good and honest representatives in Congress are mixed up with the corrupted menwho defend Mammon and are tainted with his bribes. Hence, as we foresaw years since, it has been deemed necessary to bring about a combination irrespective of party, and to take the currency question out of the party arens. This is the sort of compromise which we understand is likely to prevail in Washington. Our own telegrams of Saturday contained the statement that " there is a growing disposition of both parties to take the currency question out of politics."

This is a sensible point. We hope that the idea may prevail. It is indeed time that something practical was done. The country is suffering from a suspension of commerce and enterprise. Distrust and fear depress the energies and industries of the land, and now they may be relieved and restored to life and hope by simply repealing the resumption act and letting the country rest, at Reast until the presidential canvass is at an

We are not sanguine about our hopes from this Congress, but even the rumors that have taken wing in relation to a compromise such as that we have described speak volumes in regard to the public necesalty. And why can't there be a compromise? Why can't the parties agree that the currency is too delicate, too sensitive, a theme to be dragged about by the rude beasts that fight in the presidential amphi theatre? The interests involved are too dear to us all to be imperilled by such barbarism. If this compromise can be effected the country may be made happy. We shall get over the presidential craze with safety, and would derive relief from the taking of the currency question out of the party arena. There might then be a square fight between popular rights and money-dealing trickery-between practical sense and the ruinous rigors of the Gradgrind schemesbetween the people and the speculators. The victory would be certain. Whereas if the question is left to the parties there is no telling how long the country may be kept in distress and the public interests held in apathy and embarrassment.

The Lexington Gazette is right in sup posing that we know the history and the nature of the allen and sedition laws and of the resolutions of '98 and '99.

But a Democratic House of Representa tives has just passed a bill taking charge even that Coneling will make no show in the of the personal conduct of voters and candidates in every State in elections for Congressmen, &c.; and we are strongly inclined REPEMPTION OF GREENBACKS.-The discussion of the currency question has reduced its proportions to the simple proposition which we have been advocating for the last two or three years. Most men now see that our weakness lies in the non-redeemability of our greenbacks at the same time that we make them the redeemer of the nationalbank notes, which are already secured by gold-bearing bonds to some thirty per cent. above their face.

As a business min who cannot pay his acknowledged indebtedness in cash is deemed dishonorable if he refuses to give his negotiable interest-bearing notes in settlement, so we contend that the United States plays a dishonorable role while it refuses to redeem its non-interest-bearing due-bills (greenbacks) in interest-bearing bonds or gold. The greenback is a promise to pay the amount of its face in coin. The early issues were fundable in interest-bearing notes or bonds. While this characteristic continued they depreciated but slightly, but as soon as it was omitted and the quantity or volume exceeded the amount necessary to the exchanges of labor, they began to depreciate. As they were a legal tender, they were good to the extent of their requirement for effecting exchanges. Now, all we want in order to make the greenback a gold-note, worth par in coin, is to redeem it in gold or its equivalent. In order to accomplish this, and aid in bringing about resumption almost immediately, is needed a law to the following purport:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed and required to cause to be prepared a new series of longtime, low-rate bonds of the United States, to be known as the redemption series, in denominations of fifty dollars and the multiple thereof, not to exceed in the aggregate two hundred million dollars, with coupons attached, bearing interest payable quarterly in coin, the principal also payable in coin at ma-turity, said redemption bonds to be issued in the redemption of the United States legaltender notes upon presentation in sums of fifty dollars or multiples thereof, at the option of the Secretary of the Treasury, and all notes so redeemed shall not be again reissued, but shall be destroyed: Provided, That it shall be optional with the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem said legal-tender notes mpon such presentation in coin, in which case said notes shall not be destroyed, but for eriminal expenses, & ..., and inserting a actions of the Government. And nothing in provision that every county, &c., shall bear this act shall be construed to increase the public debt of the United States."

public debt of the United States."

The probable effect of such an act would be to restore the confidence of the business community in the permanent resumption. The rate of interest should be high enough when taken in connection with the length of time which the bond will have to the length of time which the length of time which the bond will have to the length of time the length of time which the length of time the length of t be to restore the confidence of the busis ness community in the permanent resumption. The rate of interest should be high enough when taken is connection with the length of time which the bond will bave to run to make it equivalent to gold. Probaafter that the nation will rise up with reservation of historical papers; $1,000."

Mr. Caumr moved to insert "for probably four per cent, and fifty years would do that. Many think 8,65 would be sufficiently for the purpose. But his of the purpose, But high for the purpose, But his of the purp security.-Washington Republican. . Under this scheme, as it stands, the bonds would all be taken out and used as currency-thus drawing interest as bonds, and when lent out drawing interest as currency. A heavy penalty upon banks or persons using them as currency would make the bill complete.

As to Daniel Deronda-or the last chapter of it that has appeared—the Louisville Courier savs: "The book closes with a very tame boatrow on the Thames, the rescue of a Jewish girl from drowning, and a Dickens-like domestic coincidence without any of the Dickens geniality and power." This boat-row is lugged in by the head and shoulders.

CONTRADICTION .- Colonel J. S. Mosby authorizes an emphatic denial of the statement made by a Washington correspondent in reference to an interview between himself and General Grant. Colonel Mosby has had an interview with the President, but the result of that interview has not been made known to any one by Colonel Mosby.
